From the school board

A look at school discipline

For many years the public has expressed concern about school discipline. Perhaps this has developed because of changes which have occurred in society. Included among these changes are students' rights, less supervision of students, more student independence and varying ideas as to standards of discipline and conduct.

Student discipline must be considered from several points of view. What does the home provide toward the development of self disciplined individuals? Does the school have standards of discipline? Are students assisted in achieving the standards of conduct established by the schools?

With exceptions, student conduct in school and society reflects the environment in which the child has lived during the early years of life. Students learn right from wrong at a very early age. They tend to imitate those habits which they observe in adults. If the environment is organized and structured, the child will tend to exhibit similar characteristics. If self control, respect, honesty, friendliness...are emphasized, similar qualities will be observed in the youngster.

The child enters school at approximately five years of age. It is at this time that the school and home must work together to help the individual continue in his growth toward becoming a self disciplined individual. The school has a tremendous responsibility to provide an atmosphere which will contribute to this development.

A school environment which conveys to students love, respect, concern, fairness and firmness is essential. It is important that this atmosphere be observed throughout the school, as well as in each classroom. In such an environment a student will feel secure and will begin to understand what is expected relative to behavior.

The Appomattox County School Board has established standards of conduct for students who attend schools within the county. These standards are as follows: 1) Be punctual in going to each class; 2) respect the rights and property of others; 3) resolve conflicts peacefully, 4; be honest and truthful, 5; use appropriate and acceptable language, 6) respect the personal and physcial safety and welfare of others, 7) respect other students' rights to learn, 8) make appropriate use of school property, equipment and personal possessions, 9) refrain from using alcohol and drugs on school grounds, 10) function at a level of maturity appropriate for age and grade, 11) demonstrate acceptable manners and 12) avoid defiance, disrespect and rudeness toward teachers and others.

As students advance through school, discipline problems can become more severe with those individuals who do not develop self-discipline. The school system will make every effort to be fair with each individual and to provide due process in working through discipline cases. However, in those cases where it is concluded by the school board that every reasonable effort has been taken to give a student an opportunity to change and no positive results are observed, the only viable alternative for the school board is to consider expulsion. Expulsions may result from threats, physical attacks, use of drugs, continued disruption of classes and other violent or destructive acts within the schools.

Generally, students in Appomattox County Schools exhibit very good conduct. They are responsible, dependable, friendly and courteous. These students want to get maximum results from their educational opportunities. Therefore, the school system will not allow the irresponsible acts of a very few students to infringe upon the rights of others. Swift action will be taken when necessary.

If you have concerns about school discipline, you are urged to call the Appomattox County School Board.

A phone gift

Continental Telephone customers will be receiving a New Year's present this year.

On January 1 the federal excise tax on telephone service will drop from two percent to one percent, the compnay announced today.

But the tax won't disappear entirely at the end of the year, as Congress voted several years ago. This year's tax bill postpones that, keeping it one percent until January 1, 1985.

Next year's drop will save telephone customers approximately $516 million, according to estimates by the U. S. Independent Telephone Association (USITA). Some $116 million of the amount will be saved by customers of the Independent telephone companies.

USITA represents the interests of the nation's 1,500 non Bell system telephone companies serving more than 36 million phones–one out of every five in the nation.

The telephone tax was imposed by Congress during World War I as a "temporary" measure. Although repealed briefly after the war, it was reinstituted during the Depression and at one time rates were as high as 25 percent on long distance calls and 15 percent on local service.

"Several years ago Congress voted to gradually eliminate the tax, which had stood at 10 percent for almost 20 years. In recent years it has dropped one percent each year and was scheduled to be eliminated at the end of 1982. However, legislation enacted in 1980 continued the tax at two percent through 1981. The latest bill allows the decrease to one percent in 1982 but continues it at that rate through 1984.

Cropland soil is eroding

It's a fact - America faces a threat of reduced agricultural productivity and increased production costs. This is the conclusion of a three-day study by the U. S. Department of Agriculture (USDA). The study was required by Congress in the Soil and Water Resources Act. of 1977 (RCA), according to Manly S. Wilder, Soil Conservation Service (SCS), State Conservationist in Virginia.

Specifically, the RCA study showed that one-third of America's cropland is eroding faster than the soil can rebuild itself through natural processes. Unless conservation measure are taken, the acreage of this excessively eroding land will increase further. Virginia ranks tenth among the states with the most serious erosion problems. These RCA findings are based on the most intensive and accurate appraisal of the country's natural resources ever conducted, Wilder Reports. "Much of the data came from onsite examinations at about 200,000 sample points across the U.S. In Virginia, 5,292 sample points were used."

The RCA report shows that farmers have been overcoming potential crop production losses to erosion by increasing inputs of technology - more fertilizer, chemicals, etc. By effectively controlling erosion, soils will have more capacity to respond to increased technology and would be more productive.

Also, upstream flood damages and deterioration of water quality are increasing. Depletion of ground water threatens the continuation of irrigated agriculture in extensive areas of the West.

USDA proposes a national conservation program to deal with the serious resource conservation problems ahead for American Agriculture. Four points highlight the program, according to Wilder; setting soil and water conservation priorities; strengthening the role of local and state governments in conservation planning; increasing budget coordination and cooperation between USDA agencies; and targeting more USDA conservation assistance to critical problems and areas.

Other features of the program include promoting tax incentives for conservation systems; conservation research; education and information toward the most critical problems; and setting up pilot projects to test new solutions to conservation problems. Current programs will continue.

Details of the new program are presented in the RCA Revised Draft Program Report and Environmental Impact Statement available for reference use at SCS and ASCS offices throughout the state. The two USDA offices also have leaflets that summarize the program and that contain a postage-paid, pre-addressed response form.

Comments on the new program are encouraged. They must be submitted by January 15, 1982.

Keep eyes on tires

With the Christmas/New Year holiday season a few days away and the long, cold winter setting in, motorists need to remember that proper tire maintenance can help insure maximum tire performance.

During cold weather, tire air pressure can drop approximately one pound for every 10 degree temperature decrease, advises the Virginia Department of Transportation Safety (VDTS).

"Correct tire inflation and sufficient tread are essential at this time of year. They allow for maximum traction and braking, easy steering and cornering and a longer tire life," said VDTS director John T. Hanna.

"Tires are so important to vehicle safety that they are second only to brakes in needing prime attention and care," he added.

Frequent tire checks should be scheduled during the cold fall and winter months. It's also a good idea to carry a tire air pressure guage because service station guages are occasionally inaccurate.

Tires worn below 1/16 inch depth in two or more adjacent grooves where ply cords show are dangerous and should be replaced immediately. They can be tested with a tire tread depth guage. Both guages are available at automotive supply stores for under $5.

Bald tires spell danger. They double the risk of skidding. Their slick, no-tread surface is up to 44 times more likely to have flats as new tires, according to the Tire Industry Safety Council. Excessive or abnormal tread wear, fabric breaks or cuts can also threaten vehicle driving safety.

If skidding occurs, let up on the accelerator. Don't brake. Steer in the direction the rear of the vehicle is skidding. After gaining control slow down by pumping the brakes lightly.

"Although tire safety and environmental factors play important roles in overall driving safety, motorists are reminded that four out of five highway accidents are caused by driver error," Hanna said. "Stay within the 55 mph speed limit;
•drive defensively.
